Notice

The proliferation of technologies in general and 'internet' or 'cyberspace' in particular has facilitated societies with creativity and connectivity. The popularity of Internet has risen to the extent that it becomes the integral part of the urban dweller's life. Its contribution in socio economic and political development of the State can't be denied. However, its dark side can also not be ignored. The technical nature of its function along with the anonymity of offenders and its wide impact at shortest possible time makes it the most favourable platform for the anti-social elements. The women and children in particular are the most vulnerable ones for this technology. NCRB in its Crime Report 2017 specifically creates a category for Cyber Crime against Women and Children. It reports 4,242 cyber offences where women were either stalked, blackmailed or their morphed pictures were uploaded on the internet.

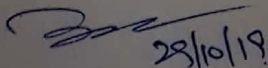

In pursuit of the above understanding the University School of Law & Legal Studies along with the IAMAI-Facebook is conducting a Workshop relating to Women's Online Safety on 1st November 2019.
